Creative Looking to Provide Value to Local Fashion Scene

Shaun Russell has only recently opened up his photography from a small hobby done on the weekend to an endeavor that local small business can use to advance their goals.

"My intention is to be able to create on a bigger stage and to gain a larger audience" says Russell who claims "I was never interested in giving up my weekends to shoot other people's birthday parties." He still resists calls for him to monetize his passion, and is only looking to strike a balance between grander artistic themes and the expenses that accompany them.

To navigate this, in 2024 he has started actively recruiting local fashion designers, boutiques and business to participate in his creative projects. They can help sponsor the artistry directly through merchandise, location, products and/or events. In return, they would gain marketing material to feed the ever growing demands of social media engines and in the increased exposure generated from the credits of Brand Ambassadors & publications.

"I feel like I'm helping business owners and models grow. I didn't get behind a camera to change, I did it to create cool stuff."

Shaun Russell has close to fifty publication credits to his name including eight cover pages. He focuses on flash photography at a studio in his Charlotte home and local surroundings (although he has plans to expand his shooting locations to South Carolina & Georgia for the summer). He is encouraging all small business owners who might have a limited marketing budget to reach out to him. "I know there are those who can utilize what I'm doing for fun anyway, what better way to be a part of the community."

I'm Russell, the Computer Engineer. But all the logic & math I use on a daily basis stimulates a different type of creativity, so I use portrait photography as an artistic outlet. I love creating scenes in which my subjects feel positive & confident. Sharing that confidences with audiences like SOCKS & PIZZA has given me a fulfillment that I've been lacking for over forty years. I am beyond grateful to have discovered this passion & I look forward to creating at every opportunity.
